ONE of the most amusing sights in the circus is a boxing match between a pair of kangaroos. The two beasts found partners but in vain, seem to have a natural repugnance for staying over though Nature meant fit them to do their fighting according to the rules laid down by the Marquis of Queensberry.

Through countless centuries of evolution these legs, which now have been made heavier and stronger, were originally designed to lift the man and his baggage around in knee and power. The beam grew a thick wing and powerful tail.

As the interesting pictures taken at a zoo near Amsterdam, Holland, on this page show, a flying kangaroo doesn't do much with its "arms" except

Queer "Automobiles" That Rolled Over the Roads in the Middle Ages

FEW, if any, of the many mechanical wonders that people make use of in this fast-moving age emerged full-blown from the brain of 19th century inventors. The steam locomotive, the airplane, the automobile, the automobile all had their strange, and usually impractical, ancestors which paved the way for the modern versions of these boons to civilization.

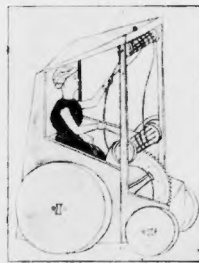

The automobile, perhaps, has a more remarkable family album than any of our modern means of getting from one place to another. Hundreds upon hundreds of vehicles were tried out by the people of other days who were, undoubtedly, seeking the speed and the comfort embodied in the modern motor car. A few of the many automobiles of the past are shown in the picture.

It must have been much more comfortable to ride in a "tail" channel, which some inventive Interchange removed early in the 17th century. This machine, shown in one of the pictures

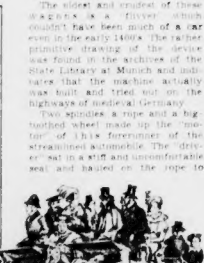

An ancestor of both the automobile and the interstate was once the pride of the highways of the British Isles. That was back in 1825, when a big and highly ornamental stage bus carried passengers between London and Birmingham. Much credit for this machine, which may have been looked upon as a revolutionary advance in transportation, goes to Walter Mac

Abdul Latif, Emissary and Handy Man of Bacha.

Afghan Tribesmen Who Rallied to Nadir Shah and Joined His March on Kabul, the Capital to Battle With Bacha.

LIFE is precarious in Afghanistan, that semi-barbaric state which lies between Russia and India, but there is one spot, Kabul, the capital, where there is law and order and the refinements of civilized modern life. In Kabul lives the King (the Amir) in the royal palace and there are electric lights, telephones, automobiles and a few foreign legations. In the hills outside the capital murderous bands of brigands waylay travelers and rob the camel caravans without restraint.

It was Bacha Saqou, king of the hillmen, who made up his mind to make himself king of his country. In these pages Bacha tells his own story, how he came down from the mountains at the head of his northern band of followers and overthrew the king, Amanullah.

Unmatched by an historical event in modern times, the adventures of this brigand who became a king read like chapters from the Arabian Nights. His story was transcribed by a scholar to whom he dictated it.

Synopsis of Preceding Chapters.

A boy of fourteen, young Bacha Saqou ran away from Kandahar, the wretched village of his birth, after committing his first murder and became a bandit in the hills. A Mullah (Holy Man) prophesied that the brigand would become a King and gave him an amulet to charm away robbers. He also declared that two months after the Mullah's death Bacha would meet his doom.

His qualities of leadership made him chief of the brigands and he and his band plundered the caravans with ruthless hand. Expeditions sent against him by King Amanullah were captured or driven off and Bacha, at the head of 2,000 bandit hillmen, set out to attack Kabul, the capital.

Gathering in his standard some of the native tribes who were angry at the King's efforts to modernize the country, Bacha arrived at the gates of the capital with a considerable armed force. After some stiff fighting, the bandit chief entered Kabul and King Amanullah fled.

Established in the royal palace, Bacha proclaimed himself King, took the name King Habibullah and appointed a Cabinet from his ruffian followers, only one of whom, the Chief Chamberlain, could read or write. The royal treasury was empty, but the new King quickly filled it by bloodthirsty methods he had learned as a robber in the hills.

Having no sympathy for education or the arts, Bacha closed the schools and devised the most cruel tortures to extract money from the prisoners he kept his brigand troops contented.

Before long the deposed King, Amanullah, mustered a force and endeavored to regain his kingdom but was again put to flight.

CHAPTER VII.

NOW, indeed was I King, and with military career cast aside for the time being, I had moments which I could devote to the task of consolidating my hold. Solidly behind me I had the men of the North. Those to the south had perforce to accept me by force of arms, and those of the East had been largely won over by the soft caresses of Sher Jan.

Yet, gazing around the Royal Palace, I knew that something had to be done were I to receive and retain the good will of the nobles and upper classes. My warriors were of the hills, and despised the effeminate trappings which went with the Palace and, knowing their feelings in the matter, I found it difficult to chide them. To be truthful, it was not my heart to do so, for I was really at one with these simple ruffians.

I realized that it was perhaps incongruous for my retainers to wash their muddy boots in the porcelain hand basins, and to hang their cartridge belts from the chandeliers. I did not criticize their actions when they removed the expensive rugs from the floors to keep warm their pack animals at night, for the weather was still cold. I decided, nevertheless, that a certain decorum might be invested in my court were I to take in marriage a lady more accustomed to the ways of the Kings than was I.

My present wife, a rough woman of the hills,

AND AN EXCELLENT

woman, but in no sense could she be called a Queen. Her gnarled hands and her swelling frame were exterior which went ill with court life. She remained exactly what she was—a hard-working, painstaking consort for a man who dwelt in the mud-bruts of the hills.

She was unhappy if she were not working. Her principal relaxation was to knead the dough for hill bread and to gossip with the other women while so doing.

Domestic labors such as this hardly went with a chieftain.

Time and time again I remonstrated with her as she squatted in the palace kitchens plastering her cakes on the oven.

"Woman," I explained with hauteur on the occasion I have in mind, "desist. Give of this work to the menials, and retire to the Royal Suite in the Palace and your handmaidens."

Still kneeling she glanced up at me.

"Why should I be cooped up like a hen?" she retorted. "Am I not a free woman of the hills?"

"You are wife of the King." Sometimes she could be extraordinary dense, and she roused my anger. And the foolish creature chuckled, like the hen she despised.

"Wife of the King!" Her laugh was unsmiling, and she still thrust her hands into the dough.

She rose from her sitting posture and faced me, clad as she was in the rough garments of the hills.

"I am the wife of Bacha Saqou," she returned quietly. "As for the King, if he would have a wife who would play the part of Queen, let him take one!"

Another abdication.

I took the hint, and married a woman of high lineage—a relative of the departed Amanullah. My purpose was not only to garnish my court, but to win over, thereby, those who were still sympathetic towards the cause of the ex-monarch. Also, such a marriage raised my dignity, and placed me on a plane where I could contend with those high-born who found it difficult to restrain their sneers, when they mentioned the name of this King.

I should not describe this as an ideal union, for the lady remained aloof, and sought vigorously to inculcate in me the ways of the courtier. Especially did she speak with scorn of the cock fights which I staged in the audience chamber. Such spectacles, she said, were for the hours of the bazaar, and not for the King. But here, at least, I would accept none of her chiding, for these cock fights were the breath of my life.

Every Friday after the Faithful had attended their prayers, I had cranes make their way through the bazaars, crying to the people to bring their cocks to wage war with the King. Only those with the most mettlesome birds knew that they might compete, for I had some of the bravest fighters ever reared in Kohistan. Any man in my home province who possessed a bird of outstanding merit knew that he could expect rich reward from his King merely by transporting it to Kabul.

These weekly contests became quite a feature of the life at the Palace. A circle eighteen feet in diameter would be drawn upon the carpets of the audience chamber, and a peg driven through the center. We retained the ancient manner of betting for these bouts—a time-honored custom which had been evolved to flout the old-established laws which forbade the placing of large sums on the results of these encounters.

More often than not a man would approach the court bookmaker and proffer an old whip to the value of a few pennies. There would be a whispered conversation, and lo, the whip would be entered as a camel, or a square of land.

The cocks, which I had specially reared, were never less than eighteen inches in height, and I fed them on cream and wheat. I never allowed them to be armed with metal spikes, for these were apt to bring a contest to too sudden an end. When our cocks fought, they fought.

The excitement on these Friday afternoons did much to banish the cares of state, more especially as a bout seldom went by without a contest of a more sanguinary nature being fought on the outside of the ring.

Feelings in a rabby ran high on these occasions, especially when men staked their all and lost, and when knives were drawn my soldiers would intervene.

At the conclusion of the cock fighting those who had taken umbrage would themselves be introduced to the eight-foot circle, and each would be provided with a dagger. There they were allowed to fight to their hearts' content, and there would be more wild betting on the results. I had men specially deputed on these occasions to remove the bodies and to sand the arena for each succeeding contest.

It was in an atmosphere such as this that the thought came to me that Afghanistan should celebrate its day of independence from the dominance of Amanullah. I issued orders that this should be done, and I promised the people high revelry.

On the morning of the day I had nominated, I betook myself to one of the high windows of the Palace—a favorite scouting place of mine—and surveyed the scene through my binoculars. And I laughed, for this was the land upon which Amanullah would impose the mind of the West. There were the men he would see entranced in European troupes.

Thousands of stalwart warriors had trekked down from the Kohistan highlands, and hundreds were arriving, even as I scanned the streets. They came, thirsty and tired, yet joyous, eagerly looking forward to the gaiety and the feasting which their Bacha had promised them. They came singly, in twos and threes, and in herds, some on foot, others on Turkistan dromedaries, still more on hardy pack ponies. There were even those who did not despise the dwarfed hill donkey.

I hurriedly donned an old sheep-skin coat, and went to mingle with the throng, for my heart went out to these simple folk, and I envied them their care-free existence. They did not have a coldly

General Nadir Shah, Who Overthrew Bacha Saquo, but Was Later Assassinated.

"Every Friday, after the faithful had attended their prayers, I had craves make their way through the bazaars, crying to the people to bring their cocks to wage war with the King. Only those with the most mettlesome birds knew that they might compete, for I had some of the bravest fighters ever reared in Kohistan. I had men specially deputed on these occasions to remove the bodies, and to sand the arena for each succeeding contest.

"You so far forget yourself as to defeat me at chess."

And the man, instead of being contrite, would allow his eyes to gleam, and he would preen himself, for he was an exquisite in dress.

Sitting there upon the dais I wanted to punish this man but for long the means of blackening his face eluded me. Of course I could have removed it altogether, but I would employ means which would turn at his high-born pride rather than cause him bodily hurt. Then on a flash the plan came to me. For every man has his weakness. He was an insatiable desire for a continuous sequence of new wives, and I resolved to provide him with one of surpassing beauty, but one who would give him a lasting lesson. I married him with a Mohammed Zai woman, one hailing from the clan of Amir Abdur Rahman Khan, and as I left the wedding feast I laughed in my heart, for the sour tongue of the women of that clan are hell to a man on this side of the grave.

From amidst the seething ranks of the Kohistanis a voice was raised for the King, and the cry was taken up. There was a bustling from their centre, and a sheep-skin urged its way forward.

There was a shout as I stepped out from the multitude on to the Moshan, the Kohistanis exclaiming: "The King—The King, he was with us!"

There was joy on the countenances of these simple folk, but there were those among the notables who looked down their noses when they beheld the raiment which clothed their ruler. But for that I would have cast it aside, and displayed the uniform which it hid, but I retained my mark of the hillman, and flaunted it in their faces. I stepped out about eighty yards toward my parading troops, and turned to address the people. The sun was behind me, and in the eyes of those who gave me acclaim. It was a fortuitous circumstance, and one which was not pre-arranged. Methinks my Mullah of the Khyber was still in good health.

As I surveyed the people thus, I discerned a sharp flushing movement. Away toward the flank a rifle was leveled, and it was pointed at the King. Then did the multitude see how quickly their mouarch could deal with danger. My automatic rifle was in my left hand, and I did not even take the trouble to sight. A bullet winged its way beside my astrachan cap; for this would-be assassin had his weapon poised before I had seen his purpose. But the first of my shots must have crashed into his body even as his finger lugged on his trigger, for an Afghan does not so easily miss a sitting target. Five or six rounds I pumped into him before he swayed and fell amidst the crowd, and not one of my bullets harmed those about him. That was excellent shooting, and I was pleased.

The man had provided me with an element of drama which was required to round off this excellent day. He gave a flip to my enjoyment, and the people remarked how merry was the King.

These moments of leisure, I could ill-afford from the cares of State. On the one hand I had to concentrate on a steady flow of funds into the Treasury, and there were many who proved recalcitrant. Several hundred persons had necessarily to meet their deaths before the people began to realize that when their King asked for money, it was for him to receive.

Fortunately, at this time, there came to my ears an old story for which I could find little substantiation, respecting a hidden hoard laid down by a former king, Abdur Rahman. This Amir always believed in having a secret reserve, and none other than he knew where this ballion lay hidden.

With a few trusted men I spent many weary hours in the dungeons beneath the palace, and then one day I stumbled across the secret. There was indeed gold and silver there, and judging by the disarray of the treasure chamber, Amanullah had also looted it.

But for this unexpected stroke of good fortune it would have been exceedingly difficult for me at periods to maintain the pay of my soldiery, but even in the leanest times I did not forget the example set up by the Amir Abdur Rahman. I, too, would have a secret hoard, and many a night, gold and silver, packed in sacks, left on the backs of camels for the Valley of Punjshair, a little-known lair of mine in Kohistan. There, tucked away among the glens, is a considerable fortune, and the spot may be recognized by the sign of the four camels. As, however, the vultures have been at appraising wife of calculatingly hostile men continually to find fault. When the women down in the bazaars spoke to their men it was not: "You should not do that. It is unseemly to do this," but "Abdul! Tie the legs of the chickens," or: "Loosen this girth." And a man could understand that.

I paraded the city, amused with what I saw, for nearly forty thousand souls had come from the surrounding country, and the place was alive with humanity. The men, women and children lay on their bundles by the wayside. They made awnings with their homespun blankets, and I knew how snug they were. Many a time I had done the same. Now there was a woman who would array me in silk shirts and who would do me the indignity of ordering my servants to scent the water with which I bathed.

Later, when these people had rested, they marched in batches and in droves, in one mad confusion, toward the Royal gardens in the lap of the encircling Kabul hills, where I had ordered that a series of contests take place. There was tent-pegging whereat the young men could display their skill upon horseback, and there was rifle shooting and wrestling.

Unknown to the multitude, and well concealed by my sheep-skin, I entered for the tent pegging, and secured one of my own prizes. In truth I rode with vigor and there was a certain something anger within me which I found inexplicable. Perhaps I hungered for the simple ways of the road.

After the wrestling there were inter-clan contests when young men from the hills leaped into the arena and whirled and danced to the music of the flute and the beat of the tom-toms. They jumped and turned with tremendous speed amidst the vociferous exhortations of their adherents, slashing the air with their long Afghan blades, battling one with another. It was an inspiring spectacle, and it made the blood course hotly through my veins.

Then there followed a military parade wherein all who had taken part in my victorious marches showed themselves to the populace, and men remarked that the King was not present.

Another incident I must recount for it concerns a game of chess, or rather several games of chess. There was one of the high-borns who was of my entourage, and the man had a melon for a head, so full was it of his own self-esteem. I discovered, quite by chance, that I could beat this individual at chess, but he never guessed that this was the reason for his preference. This man, accustomed to the ways of courts, should have known better, but he could never forget that his King was the son of a water-carrier, and played accordingly.

"May thy grandsons be burned alive," I was constrained to swear on more than one occasion.

SO GOOD FOR DRY SKIN BECAUSE IT IS MADE WITH OLIVE OIL—A WONDERFUL BEAUTY AID!
THAT'S WHY PALMOLIVE GIVES YOUR COMPLEXION SPECIAL CARE—KEEPS
SKIN SOFTER, SMOOTHER...

YOUNGER-LOOKING, TOO,
I'D SAY! YOU'VE NO IDEA
HOW MUCH PRETTIER
PALMOLIVE HAS MADE
YOU, PEG!

AND HERE'S ONE GIRL
THAT'S GOING TO PROVE
BY YOUR BEAUTY LESSON!
PALMOLIVE IS THE ONLY SOAP I'LL USE FROM NOW ON.

WHY PALMOLIVE, MADE WITH OLIVE

OIL, GIVES COMPLEXIONS A SPECIAL CARE

... KEEPS SKIN SOFT, SMOOTH, YOUNG!

Palmolive is made from a special blend of Olive and Palm Oils—nature's finest beauty oils. Naturally, a soap made with these beauty oils has a different and very special lather. Palmolive's lather is so soothing, so kind to your skin. It cleanses gently, yet with a thoroughness that removes every bit of dirt and cosmetics. Keeps your skin soft, smooth and fresh... alive with beauty.

MADE WITH OLIVE OIL,
TO KEEP SKIN YOUNG AND LOVELY

KEEP THAT "SCHOOLGIRL COMPLEXION"... GUARD AGAINST "MIDDLE-AGE" SKIN

CHAPTER 1

[illegible]

ing the truck at the base of the cave and the air was full of fog spray. When we rounded the corner of the hill which cut off the California cave from Aurora we saw that all the foodstuffs had been turned on their sides and upside down. From the curved roof the contents of the boxes of flour and yellow beans were piled up.

Because a man, after three times were he a man, it is a fact, if I buys up and enters. They were he about before coming.
The woman grew again, of all words.

But the entrance was not yet over.

On the distant horizon we saw a sudden burst of light: blue and white, and green, closely to each by a second.

Jimmy said: "That's a boy's face."

A to 40, with the last

“What’s the matter?” he asked.
“The house,” Hilda said. “I don’t out.”
“Mind,” Mike interrupted.
“Never,” she said. “In the first place, I’m completely and utterly of Sakschorean. It was my father about her.”
“How do you manage to chat?”
Hilda wanted to know. “We have this peculiar possession.”
“It’s a piece of paper,” Mike said. “Not only that, but it’s there, and it is in a state

It's a Family Affair

Happy moments make a happy family. Ice-cold Coca-Cola makes the pause that refreshes a happy moment the whole family can share.

There's no longer boring, when you are tired and thirsty from shopping, than the pause that refreshes with ice-cold Coca-Cola.

There's no place like home for the pause that refreshes with ice-cold Coca-Cola. It's easy to get a few bottles at a time and it's easy to order a case (24 bottles).

After exercise you are tired and thirsty... and nothing is so welcome as the pure refreshment of ice-cold Coca-Cola.

1. The first step is to identify the main components of the system. This involves understanding the hardware and software involved, as well as the data flow and the roles of the various components.

2. The second step is to define the system's goals and objectives. This involves identifying the specific tasks that the system is designed to perform, and the performance metrics that will be used to evaluate its success.

3. The third step is to design the system architecture. This involves determining the overall structure of the system, including the components, their interactions, and the data flow.

4. The fourth step is to implement the system. This involves building the hardware and software components, and integrating them into a single system.

5. The fifth step is to test the system. This involves verifying that the system meets its requirements, and that it is able to perform its intended functions.

6. The sixth step is to deploy the system. This involves installing the system in its intended environment, and making it available to users.

7. The seventh step is to maintain the system. This involves monitoring the system's performance, and making any necessary adjustments or repairs.

8. The eighth step is to evaluate the system. This involves assessing the system's performance against its goals and objectives, and identifying areas for improvement.

9. The ninth step is to document the system. This involves creating a comprehensive record of the system's design, implementation, and operation.

10. The tenth step is to train the users. This involves providing users with the necessary knowledge and skills to use the system effectively.

With perfect efficiency, the total loss takes the form $\frac{1}{2} \sum_{i=1}^n \frac{1}{\lambda_i}$ and the difference between the observed loss and the expected loss is $\frac{1}{2} \sum_{i=1}^n \frac{1}{\lambda_i} - \frac{1}{2} \sum_{i=1}^n \frac{1}{\lambda_i} = 0$. The variance of the loss is $\frac{1}{4} \sum_{i=1}^n \frac{1}{\lambda_i^2}$. The expected loss is $\frac{1}{2} \sum_{i=1}^n \frac{1}{\lambda_i}$ and the variance of the loss is $\frac{1}{4} \sum_{i=1}^n \frac{1}{\lambda_i^2}$.

The 1958 Coronas are a lot like their counterparts in the 1950s—there are plenty of reasons why. That year Coronas celebrated more than a century of writers in the United States than ever before in history, and their history goes back 15 years to the first successful portable typewriter—the first Corona. Ever since, Coronas have led the way.

And the 1958 Coronas are the finest, the fastest, and the most complete that we have ever offered. Check the list of Corona features, have your dealer point out how they save time, save work, save wear. Remember that with a little extra Corona will last a lifetime, and then remember that you can buy it for as little as $1 a week, right today at any Corona dealer's.

Try one tomorrow, or mail us the coupon for free booklet.

Safe, Sure Relief In One Minute!

Dr. Scholl's Zino-pads

Half & Half Makes ONE Swell Smoke!

Not a bit of bite in the tobacco or the Telescope Tin, which gets smaller and smaller as you use up the tobacco. No bitten fingers as you reach for a load, even the last one.

Half & Half sure makes a pipe perform. Cool as the news that the car's out of gas. Smooth as the sight of that pump by the curb. Fragrant, friendly, full-bodied tobacco that won't bite the tongue—in a tin that won't bite the fingers. Made by our exclusive modern process including patent No. 1,770,920. Cool and smooth. Smells good. Makes you as welcome anywhere. Tastes good. Your passport to pleasure.

4 Hours of "Vocal Gymnastics" to Make a Single Scene

HERBERT MARSHALL tells how "voice shading" strains his throat—makes a light smoke important...

1. "IN 'ANGEL', my new Paramount picture," says Mr. Marshall, "I play an English statesman. The part requires that—no matter how exciting the action—I talk in a reserved manner. With a mere 'Oh' or 'Yes' or 'Thanks' I must express all the excitement. Now..."

2. "SHADING THE VOICE is often more of a strain on the throat than acting out a line vigorously. The above scene took half a day to shoot—4 hours of 'vocal gymnastics'. Yet even under such strains, Luckies are always gentle on my throat..."

3. "MOST OF HOLLYWOOD seems to prefer Luckies, too. That's quite a compliment because there's no place in the world where throats are so important. Throats are important everywhere. Mr. Marshall, and this is the reason we use the special process 'It's Toasted' which takes out certain throat irritants found in all tobacco."

4. "IN MY LIVING ROOM I have several 'barometers' that tell the popularity of the different brands... I mean the cigarette boxes I keep filled for my guests. Luckies disappear twice as fast as any other. I hear lots of comments about Luckies... easier on the throat... made of better tobacco. So Luckies are tops among my friends, too!"

HERBERT MARSHALL, famous RKO star, soon to appear in Paramount's 'ANGEL', directed by Ernst Lubitsch

LUCKY STRIKE
"IT'S TOASTED"
CIGARETTES

Surely, men who spend their lives buying, selling and handling tobacco are the best judges of tobacco quality.

And now, sworn records available for your inspection show that, among independent tobacco experts, Lucky Strike has twice as many exclusive smokers as have all the other cigarettes combined!

This is the verdict of tobacco men—auctioneers, buyers, warehousemen, etc.—not connected with any cigarette manufacturer. In the honest judgment of the men who know tobacco best... it's Luckies—2 to 1.
